Local Local moves are defined as covering no more than 50 miles from point A to point B. Local moves are priced by the hour and charges vary according to number of movers and trucks used. Relocating beyond that distance but in the same state is defined as an interstate move, priced according to weight of shipment and distance traveled.	Long Distance Long distance moves, also called interstate moves, usually cross state lines and cover more than 100 miles from origin to destination. Find out more about local moving companies in your area, providing long distance moving services.	International International moves are defined as crossing international borders. Moving overseas is a complicated process requiring proficient and well-equipped international movers that can provide you with peace of mind when moving out of the country.
Home/Residential No matter how many miles you are relocating or how tight your budget is, there will always be the right residential mover to relocate you. Here you can find and compare multiple moving quotes by dependable home movers.	Commercial Professional and experienced commercial movers can relocate your business without reducing productivity. Commercial movers should be capable of moving a small office with the same competence as it takes to relocate a large corporation.	Moving Costs Moving costs depend on weight of shipment, distance traveled, and additional services. Peak seasons also influence moving costs.
